Teach Trump's America Posted by Ethan Brooks-Davies on August 21, 2017 This is a guest post by Ethan Brooks-Davies, the executive director of the American Association of University Professors. On July 13, 2017, the president of Marquette University in Milwaukee, Wisconsin announced that social science and political science professor Michael Novak would be a special visiting professor. Novak will be on campus from September 19 to October 22. Although the academy and the university have been at odds on a wide range of issues, including women in the classroom, racism, and mass incarceration, the announcement provoked no coverage and little notice. No editorials, commentaries, or op-eds celebrated the appointment. One day after the announcement, the Chronicle of Higher Education published a brief article with a link to Novak's remarks at a graduation ceremony for the Marquette basketball team a few days earlier. His remarks are worth quoting in full: For more than 40 years I have been paying close attention to the way the left has defined America. They say that to be American is to be a Christian, white, native-born, Christian, Republican and male. They say that to be a Christian is to be God's chosen people. They say that to be white is to be pure, while they say that to be male is to be privileged. They say that to be Republican is to be pro-military. And they say that to be a man is to be disciplined. Let me suggest a radical suggestion: to be an American is to be a human being. To be an American is to be an individual, to have a self and to define your own life, to have your own opinions, to make your own decisions, to think for yourself. These are things that the left thinks they know, that they can tell you who you are, what is true and false, what you must think and what you must believe
