The present invention relates to a newly discovered human gene encoding a polypeptide which is referred to hereinafter as "gene product A". The gene product A is capable of suppressing the growth of tumors in human tumor cells as demonstrated by the tumor formation assay in nude mice described below. Moreover, the gene product A also suppresses the growth of human osteosarcoma and inhibits the proliferation of human chondrocytes. These results suggest that the gene product A might be involved in tumor formation and/or osteosarcoma-related pathogenesis in humans. Q: Django set_error_message_prefix sets error message prefix for all forms I'm using set_error_message_prefix on all forms in my project. This works fine for some forms, but for others it sets the prefix to 'Error', or 'Field'. For example, if I have a standard TextField form, it works fine. If I have a custom form that inherits from the standard TextField form, it sets the prefix to 'Error', or 'Field', depending on what fields I have. So, in the case of my custom form, the default prefix for the custom form is set to 'Error', but the default prefix for all the other forms is 'Field'. Is there a way to fix this? A: You can override the get_form_class method of your forms. In your case, it would be something like this: class MyForm(forms.Form): def get_form_class(self): clazz = super().get_form_class()
